

FEB 21 1959

Sanitized - Approved For Release : CIA-RDP75-0000

FOIAb6

CPYRGHT

● Like the skilled bureaucrat he has erstwhile proved himself, Mr. Richard Bissell has inaugurated his regime as Deputy Director of CIA by tightening up control over his division chiefs, who were given some leeway by predecessor Frank Wisner. Mr. Bissell will now be able to guarantee a do-nothing policy. Bissell and his favored CIA teammate, Robert Amory, lean ideologically on CIA's outriding auxiliary at MIT, the Center for International Studies. They have been particularly influenced by the neo-Marxian theories of W. W. Rostow, director of the Center, whose Cambridge University lectures last year outlined the theoretical basis for the do-nothing approach to "the Russian question."

MEMORANDUM FOR: DCI

The NATIONAL REVIEW BULLETIN of 21 February 1959, attached has the following re Richard Bissell, Frank Wisner, Robert Amory and W. W. Rostow at MIT.

FOIAb6

STANLEY J. GROCAN
Assistant to the Director

16 February 1959
(DATE)